A Few Observations

The following are the only -r controlled words that over two thirds of 3rd graders can correctly spell: Note that not a single w- controlled word or w-r controlled word made the list. Nor did any -r controlled word that began with either a consonant blend or consonant digraph. Only one plural form made the list. Surely, if phonics is being taught correctly and intensively in the first two grades, you would expect more than 5 words out more than 600 single syllable mostly phonically regular words to be correctly spelled.. Something must be radically wrong with our teaching of reading and spelling in the first two grades!

When only a total of 27 out of over 600 phonically regular -R controlled, W- controlled and W- & -R controlled words can be spelled by more than 50% of our third graders, something is terribly wrong.

If it is true that the 10% of 3rd graders who can spell the word nerve are gifted, wouldn't you think that more than 10% of these gifted could drop a silent e and add -ous to make nervous! Of course, they could. If they were taught! But as is, only 1% of all 3rd graders can spell nervous.

If 41% can spell care, you would think that at least 75% of these students could add the -ful suffix to spell careful. But no, only 25% of those who could spell care could add -ful. That is only 10% of all third graders could spell careful. The “gifted” ones! Now, you would think that gifted 3rd graders could add -ly to careful and end up spelling carefully. But no, only 40% of the “gifted” could do that. That is, only 4% of 3rd graders could spell carefully.

The percentages next to words represent the number of 3rd grade students who can correctly spell that word according to The New Iowa Spelling Scale. Those words without a percentage after them are generally never found in any 3rd grade book.
